“ I met Tony in the late sixties. I remember him as a confident man. He spoke spoke well, dressed well and I was impressed by his presentation. He was looking for work for his painting business.and sought my business. We became friends. He worked for me into the seventies. Sometime in the seventies probably during one of those major recessions for multifamily builders we ceased doing business, but Tony remained a presence in my life.

It turned out that Tony's father, Anthony, worked for the Montalbano's who were neighbor of my grandparents. When I met him he told me he learned to make beautiful crafted furniture there in his youth. I went on to buy furniture through Tony for several years.

Then when Tony moved to Florida he never forgot to call on my birthday and also on Thanksgiving and Christmas. Truthfully, I forgot to call him on his birthday for many years, until he reminded me that his birthday also was my former wife's birth date and enough said. I, remaining in this world am sad for my loss, but I am confident his faith has delivered him at last to an eternal life in a perfect body.
